Greg Stringham is a professional engineer. He is the Vice President of Markets and Oil Sands. His responsibilities at CAPP include pipelines and oil sands issues in both the US and Canada. Greg is an active spokesperson for the petroleum industry; providing industry and public presentations, appearing before government committees and regulators in Canada and the US, and working frequently with the media. Previous to his current position Greg with the Alberta Department of Energy where he dealt with various energy issues.

Andrew Miall is a professor of Geology at the University of Toronto. Andrew Miall has worked at the intersection between energy and the environment. In the fall of 2010, he was selected by the federal Environment Minister, the Honorable James Prentice, to serve on a committee of six Canadian scientists enjoined with the task of improving environmental oversight and management of the Canadian oil sands. In January 2011, Dr. Miall was appointed by the Environment Minister of Alberta, the Honorable Rob Renner, to the Alberta Environmental Monitoring Panel, tasked with making recommendations for a complete overhaul of Alberta's environmental monitoring work, with an initial focus on the Oil Sands. In both cases, the objective of these committees was to develop world-class environmental monitoring and reporting practices, aimed at improving the management of air and water pollution, as industrial development activity in the oil sands increases in the coming decades.
